Excerpt: .take amiss the somewhat tardy recognition of his genius which took place at Canterbury a few days ago. But while it is right and proper to perpetuate Marlowe s memory in the place of his birth, Mr. Irving s suggestion of a monument in Canterbury Cathedral savored more of generous enthusiasm than of sober judgment, and it may not be too much to say that no one would have seen the incongruity of the idea more quickly than the keen-eyed dramatist himself. He liked not churches--and churches liked not him. Mr. George Allen, the publisher, tells me that he is about to bring out some of Mr. Ruskin s wotk which has never yet appeared in book form--namely, that series of essays which ran through Loudon s Magazine many years ago, signed Kata I hasin. The new volume will be entitled The Poetry of...
