No acceptable young man could be found. Our best students, this year, remarked the President, will study law, or medicine, or enter upon some business pursuit. About the same time, Judge Cooley, of Michigan, called the attention of teachers to the danger to our national life arising from the drawing off of our young men from the public instruction of the young. Teaching lacks the professional spirit, was his thought. Too many young men make it merely a stepping-stone to some other calling. It is a convenient way of replenishing the thin purse, and bridging the gap between college and life. It has been wanting, therefore, in virility, in vigor, in moral tone, and in progressive enthusiasm. And herein lies a national danger. That was...
