Excerpt: .causing them thus to glorify his Father in heaven. I mean all those qualities of the temper, character, and conduct, which recommend themselves to men of every class, and of every name. When a man shows forth such fruits of the Spirit, unbelievers are obliged to confess how lovely true religion is. I need not name them here in particular. Think for yourselves what qualities and dispositions are most dear to God, and pleasing, too, to man. Finally, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think of these things. Who within our reach want our kindness? Are there any we can influence, who might, by our advice and sympathy, be rescued from ignorance, carelessness, and sin; or whom we might lead to serious thought? Do some require our forbearance and forgiveness? Are there others towards whom we might act the...
