H. Cox, entitled Quakerism not Christianity, c. The author of the review, under the appearance, and perhaps with the intention of candour and liberality, has held up the Society of Friends, and the doctrines they profess, in a very unfavourable light. To those who are acquainted with the general character of Friends, or have taken the pains to understand their doctrines, and compare them with the testimony of Scripture, very little need be said, to show the weakness as well as the injustice of the attack, both of the author and his reviewer. If we could be assured that the readers of those productions would follow the example of the noble Bereans, and examine diligently with unbiassed minds, whether these things are so, we should feel little solicitude for the result. The author particularly has manifested a spirit which must satisfy any pious mind, that whatever errors or defects may be attributed to the people whose character he professes to delineate, he is not the man from whom correct information is to be expected.
